Moving Toward Allyship: Understanding Anti-Black Racism in the Community

Intended for parents, guardians and educators this session will spark conversations and discussions around diversity and inclusion from the school community perspective. Through sharing their lived experiences as Black women and parents, Making Change presenters bring a conversation about how building inclusion is a lifelong journey. Meant to move the conversation forward and being mindful of the sensitive nature of the discussion, they share perspectives on how to move towards allyship. Full of practical ideas and resources, this interactive session encourages participants to take action to dismantle anti-Black racism. A question and answer opportunity will close out the session.

Our one (1) hour presentation overview:

- Setting the stage for self-reflection around inclusion and diversity
- How is anti-Black racism showing up in our communities/schools
- Our lived experiences both as Black women and as parents of Black children

How individuals can become allies and do self-work around anti-Black racism
